Not illustrated. 1911 Excerpt: . . . was sunk on the hilltop 500 feet above and east of the tunnels mouth. It is said that this shaft was in gravel for its entire depth, or 375 feet. As indicated above, however, all of the gravel below the 5, 000-foot contour is believed to be out of place. This downthrown material is, however, not all gravel. There is some andesitic breccia mixed with it. Numerous rhyolite boulders and pebbles indicate an area of that rock in the vicinity, now eroded or covered over. The presence of these rhyolite pebbles would seem to indicate that a portion of this gravel is of later age than that of the Haskell Peak channel, which is capped with rhyolite. So far as could be made out, the Cedar Creek river gravel is in immediate contact on the south with the Pleistocene Mohawk Lake beds. The deposits of the old river channel just described, extending from north of the fortieth parallel near Little Grizzly Creek to the north end of the Mohawk Lake beds, are similar in being made up of gravel and coarse sand, with very little fine sediment. This may be taken as evidence that this river bed had a higher grade than those of the southwesterly system of the western half of the Downieville area. The next gravel area to the east of the high Sierra Buttes is on the steep granite slope south of Mohawk Valley, where it has an elevation of 7, 000 or...
