Probably the author of Jon. 2 was familiar with the older ps. His figures, however, are more hyperbolic and varied. In any case they are not to be interpreted literalistically. As in Ps. 30, the poet probably has primarily in mind his own experiences as an exile in a foreign land. His zeal for the temple service is strong, cf. 7-8, and indicates that he probably lived during the Greek period. For critical notes, cf. 202k-Q, Vol. III. All thy breakers and thy waves passed over me. 4Then I said, I am driven out from before thine eyes; How shall I ever again look towards thy holy temple? 5The waters surrounded me even to the quenching of my life, the abyss engulfed me, The sea weeds were wrapped about my head; 6I went down to the roots...
