Excerpt: . . . at first, if pieces of Mulberry 1 av. sare laid by or oyer them they soon commence eating. They may be placed on papers or cloths, and laid on tables whilst hatching, and fed there a few days, when they are removed on a net work frame, and there to be fed until the tune of spuing their balls. Rut in no wise must they be exposed to the rays of the sun either the eggs or worms The lime for propagation is when the foliage becomes sufficient for stripping to feed the worms We learn that in Kurope they have but one hatching season, which is about the middle of May, and the last of June their feeding season is over; but a mode has been discovered among us of late by some of our experimenting fellow countrymen to procrastinate the eggs from hatching to our convenience. This mode is to pface itte eg in ice house in dry vessels, and when prepared for the worms, bring the eggs into a warm aim sphere, and they hatch perfectly wellanv t during the summer. But Ki and vumsi oe taken to depiwit the eggs in the icehouse in the winter time before warm weather. This is nothing more than prolonging their winter, As to the qualify of American cocoons or silk, 1 will refei you to the authority of Italian and French silk growers and English manufacturers, who report to us that no silk...
